

2026-2027 Cost of Attendance Figures

CU Denver Programs

OVERVIEW

U.S. federal immigration regulations require that all F-1 visa applicants prove they have enough funds for the total estimated cost of attending the university and living in the U.S. for one academic year. An academic year is nine (9) months for most CU Denver academic programs.

J-1 visa applicants must show the total cost of attendance for the program dates on their DS-2019. You can multiply your program's estimated cost by the expected number of years in your program as a starting point. ISSS will provide a more precise estimate after you submit your Immigration Document Creation Request. Please schedule an ISSS advising appointment or participate in walk-in advising hours if you have additional questions.

ISSS must collect proof of funding from students requesting immigration documents. The proof of funding must confirm that the student has at least the minimum amount of funding required to cover estimated tuition, student fees, and living expenses during the required terms for their program.

This minimum amount is the estimated cost of attendance for your program. ISSS must include information about how you plan to cover your estimated cost of attendance on your I-20 or DS-2019. You may also need to provide this proof or explain your source of funding at your visa interview or on your change of status application.

ISSS calculates the estimated cost of attendance to meet the I-20 and DS-2019 issuance requirements. These estimates are not a guarantee of what you will pay this academic year or during your program.

The total estimated cost includes both direct and indirect expenses related to completing a CU Denver degree. Direct expenses include the tuition and fees required for your courses. Indirect expenses include the estimated cost for housing, meals, books, supplies, travel, health insurance, and incidental expenses. Please remember these numbers are an estimate. Your actual expenses may vary depending on your choices about housing and lifestyle.

Please note that actual costs will likely increase for future academic years. Costs can also change during the current academic year. Our estimate may not reflect all costs for every program and enrollment situation. Taking more credit hours may increase the cost of your program.

Students whose spouse or children will accompany them to the United States as F or J dependents must provide proof of how they will cover each family member's living expenses. Children are eligible for F-2 or J-2 status if they are unmarried and under the age of 21.

Students in 9-month programs should add $6,750 per year for each dependent family member's living expenses. Those in 12-month programs should add $9,000 per year for each dependent.

PROOF OF FUNDING DOCUMENT REQUIREMENTS

The financial document requirements for I-20 and DS-2019 issuance described below align with the U.S. Department of State requirements for granting F-1 and J-1 visas.

Please keep your original documents. You may need them during your F-1 or J-1 visa interview. Canadian and Bermudian students can present their original documents to the immigration official at the port of entry without applying for a visa.

Any document you provide for proof of funding must be less than six months old and meet our funding document requirements.

DEPENDENT LIVING EXPENSES AND INSURANCE

LIVING EXPENSES

If a spouse or child will join you as an F-2 or J-2 dependent, you must provide proof that you can cover each dependent's living expenses.

For each F-2 dependent, include the estimated living expenses for each month you must enroll at CU Denver during your first academic year.

For each J-2 dependent, multiply the estimated monthly expenses by the estimated number of months in your entire degree program. For partial months, please round up to the next whole month.

Estimated Monthly Expenses	$750
9-Month Estimate	$6,750
12-Month Estimate	$9,000

HEALTH INSURANCE

The U.S. does not have a national health system or health insurance program. Everyone in the U.S. must either have a health insurance plan or be prepared to pay for services out of pocket. Healthcare in the U.S. is much more expensive than many other countries. We strongly recommend that everyone have valid U.S. health insurance while they are in the U.S.

Anyone in J-1 or J-2 status is required to have health insurance that meets the Department of State requirements. Starting with the 2026-2027 academic year, the CU Denver student health insurance will no longer include dependent health insurance coverage. Therefore, J-2 dependents will need to find their own U.S. health insurance.

J-1 students will also need to purchase supplemental coverage to meet the medical evacuation and repatriation requirements.

Please review the CU Denver International Student Health Insurance pages or contact the Senior International Student Health Insurance Coordinator at InternationalStudent.HealthInsurance@ucdenver.edu if you have questions about options for meeting your insurance requirements.
